Deathwind of the Border

BY Irv Lampman

About the book . . .

FROM FAR BACK in the depths of the forest a soft low moan like the whisper of the night wind breathed through the woods. The Indian guard awakened his companions with a whispered word, "Deathwind."

As George Washington fights the British on the eastern front of the Revolutionary War, a completely different battle is being waged in the west, the Ohio River country. But the stakes are the same: the very existence of a new nation.

About the author . . .

IRVIN L. LAMPMAN was born and raised on a small farm in Wisconsin near the village of Deerfield, about thirty miles east of Madison. He grew up with a love of country music and a seemingly ingrained love of the wilderness. Somewhere deep within him was the spirit of the frontier. And while other boys made heroes out of Roy Rogers, Gene Autry, and countless other celluloid cowboys, his hero was the border scout, Lewis Wetzel.
