Flights of Angels

BY Doug James

About the book . . .

Flights of Angels is a novel about one man's journey from cadet to skilled flight instructor in the Navy's V-5 flight program during World War II. Billy Benson's rigorous training and experiences in the program result in his involvement in a mysterious secret mission that will be his ultimate test. Flights of Angels also tells the story of how Americans experienced life on the home front during this critical time.

While the characters and story are fictional it could well have been any number of young American servicemen who served gallantly in the war to end all wars. Flights of Angels is historically accurate, providing a firsthand look into the day-to-day challenges training to become a Navy pilot and extraordinary insight into life in America when the entire nation was united in the defense of our freedom. It is based on three years of meticulous research, interviewing dozens of individuals and family members of the men and women who served in the Navy Air Service.

About the author . . .

Doug James lives in Mobile, Alabama, and holds degrees from the University of North Alabama and Walden Universities. He served as a Field Medical Corpsman in the U.S. Navy and is an adjunct professor of communication at Spring Hill College and the Aviation School of Mobile.
